Asphalt Asphalt is the loose or solid mix of rock particles, organic matter and bitumen which is the material that composes an asphalt pavement. It may be derived from coal or petroleum tar; the name "asphalt" may also refer to a number of related materials such as asphaltic rock, asphalt cement, and asphalt concrete. History Asphalt pavement originated in antiquity. The first asphalt pavement was believed to have been laid during the reign of King Pyrrhus (c. 280-275 BC), though the earliest undisputed use was in a cemetery at Delos in Greece dating back to the 5th century BC. In France during the late 19th century, Charles Alphonse Ferdinand le Moyne de Clermont-Tonnerre studied the potential of asphalt and was instrumental in the modern era development of asphalt concrete in France in 1882. In the early 20th century, asphalt road surfaces became more

Adware, also called ad-ware, rogue, or ad-supported software, is computer software intended to display advertisements to the end user. They can be included with free software in order to finance the development of the software, and they can be included with software purchased for a fee in order to earn money to support the development of the software. Sometimes this software is bundled with other programs without the user's knowledge, since it may be used to monitor their activity. For example, spyware may be bundled with a web browser. A feature of adware, especially adware bundled with games, is the ability to click on online advertisements in order to receive free games. In most cases, the user is required to pay for the games he or she receives. Adware may require the user to install it, and a large number of adware programs use a browser hijack to redirect all Internet traffic to an advertiser's web site. For example, a person clicking on an advertisement for a new computer game would be redirected to the web site of the game publisher, the publisher's payment site, and the publisher's advertising network. This can lead to problems, such as missing spyware removal programs and the slow speed of the Internet.

Contents Unlike other software, adware often consists of nothing more than a few bundled files and a background browser. Many adware programs are designed to delete themselves after a short time, since they install themselves in the Windows Registry without providing a means to remove them. Adware is often a bundle of many kinds of programs. The most common types of adware bundled with programs are: Another characteristic of adware is that it tends to Arthur Machen (1863–1937) Arthur Machen (6 April 1863 – 14 July 1937) was an English author, best known for his collection of short stories, Tales of Ancient Love (1893) and the novels The Hill of Dreams (1902) and The Terror (1913). These works are regarded as among the first examples of modern fantasy literature.

Biography Machen was born on 6 April 1863 at 8 Edgeley Grove, Dulwich, South London. His mother was Frances Mary (née Glass), the daughter of wealthy brewers, and his father was Frederick Arthur Machen, a civil servant who also wrote poetry. He was educated at Trinity School, Cambridge, and then at Christ's College, Cambridge, from which he was expelled for misbehaviour. From 1887 he edited for a short time the literary quarterly New Review. He made a trip to the Crimea in 1892 and wrote of it in an article, 'The South'. The following year he married Mary Hilton, who he had met on the trip. Machen's most famous story is "The White Court", which was first published in The Yellow Book in 1895. It was later included in The Hill of Dreams, which came out in 1902. "The White Court" is one of the first horror stories to use supernatural elements. It is loosely based on the legend of Barabbas. A popular version of the story was made in the 1940 film The White Witch and later books such as Cthulhu's Companion. The next year he published "The Great God Pan", which is a play in two acts about the god Pan (sometimes called Pan or Apollo). The play, which was a collaboration with William Archer, was translated into French and adapted by Colette for her novel Dom Juan. In 1904 Machen published "The Starlit Mere". In 1909 the Machen family moved to Ashted in
