Note: I have struggled with overdoing it on the sodium and drinking too much water while not peeing as I have been having that problem. I have just moved to Splenda and baking soda so not sure if that is helping me with the bad sugar issue but it has definitely helped me with sugar cravings. I've been eating lower carb than I have been before, which is more of a roller coaster but I do seem to be gaining a little weight and my midsection is growing. So, I am not sure what the cause is as I go from a low calorie diet to a lower carb diet for a few days and then back to a low carb diet. I also have been having a lot of thirst. I think I have read that some people have had this issue with sugar and water consumption when transitioning to low carb/low sugar diets. I have been drinking about 2 bottles of water and that is my largest bottle that I normally drink. So, I don't know if that is making a difference, but I have had to drink more water than normal lately. I'll see if I can change up my sugar and water diets on the new plan, if I can't, then I think I'm going to have to try the Splenda as a sugar replacement. I haven't had much luck on the exercise aspect. I am still working on getting back into it. My sister was doing Zumba which I liked and I have heard of the Super Meals which are recipes for being healthy for you on the go. We will see if I can find them. I think the biggest issue is some of the things I am eating. As far as whole wheat breads with reduced carb, I just thought they were completely worthless when I read that they could be beneficial so I stop eating them completely. I also read that something called noni fruit is good for the digestive system.

Unfortunately, I cannot find out what the difference is. So far I have been
