To compare the results of standard laparoscopic and robot-assisted laparoscopic pyeloplasty. The study population comprised of 14 patients who underwent robot-assisted laparoscopic pyeloplasty and 13 patients who underwent standard laparoscopic pyeloplasty. Robotic surgery was performed at a single center. The indications for surgery were stenosis of the lower pole of the kidney in 5 patients, infundibular stenosis in 4 patients, and stenosis of the upper pole of the kidney in 5 patients. Patient characteristics, operative results, and complications were retrospectively compared between the two groups. Both laparoscopic and robotic pyeloplasty were performed successfully. There were no significant differences in patient characteristics, indications, and operative results between the two groups. Robotic pyeloplasty required a longer learning curve. However, after the learning curve had been overcome, robot-assisted pyeloplasty was found to have advantages. Robot-assisted laparoscopic pyeloplasty can be safely performed with reduced technical difficulty. a working power plant within the year after moving in. “We would be happy to see something happen with the site,” Nichols said. “We just need to get something to work. And getting something to work would be a relief.” In March, the plant became a county property. On Aug. 14, the county will host an open house at the site, offering an opportunity for the public to tour the building. A segment on the Janesville City Center transit station redevelopment will be included in this week’s eKmett@J: Local feature on the city’s transition to rail. The segment will be about the station, soon to be the first in Wisconsin to be connected to an LRT system in the country. In the segment, eKmett@J will examine the current status of the Janesville City Center transit station redevelopment and to take a look at its place as the city moves to push forward with its transportation plan. “My personal view is
