The object of the study is to identify, isolate, and characterize tumor antigens in human tumors and to attempt to develop immunological means of treatment of the disease. Immunological methods will be used to identify and quantitate antitumor antigens present on the tumor surface and/or in cell-free or extracellular fluid. This work will be carried out in two stages. In the first stage specific antisera will be developed and used in direct immunofluorescence assays and immunodiffusion analysis for the identification of the tumor associated antigens. In the second stage the most interesting antigens will be characterized by biochemical, serological and immunological methods. Characterization will include preparation of purified antigens by gel filtration, ion exchange chromatography, electrophoresis, and affinity chromatography, as well as immunochemical, physical, and chemical analysis of antigen.

Human Rights Commission sets up 'direct action' plan for prison A plan to act against the imprisonment of prisoners who suffer from mental illness has been drawn up by the Human Rights Commission. It came after evidence was given of the number of mental health prisoners being transferred from prisons to hospitals, where they are held until their mental illness has improved. The plan sets out a series of actions which can be taken by prison governors, who are ultimately responsible for the operation of prisons in England and Wales. It would include the training of prison governors to look for signs of mental illness, as well as a set of best practice measures to avoid the transfer of mentally ill prisoners to hospitals. The plan was developed by the commission in partnership with Mind, an independent mental health charity, which has been campaigning against the detention of mentally ill people in prisons. The commission said that since the Howard League for Penal Reform launched its campaign for mentally ill prisoners to be taken into hospital instead

UPDATE: BOE's Choice to Head Up FDA Could Wield Power The board of trustees for the U.S. Federal Reserve Bank of New York are set to name the next head of the Food and Drug Administration. The choice is expected to come at a time when the Obama administration and the nation's food safety advocates are bracing for the release of results of a sweeping new study that linked a common preservative used in foods and drinks to an increased risk of cancer. The board is expected to make its announcement at a board meeting on Friday. The New York Fed is responsible for running the FDA and overseeing the nation's food safety system. The person tapped to head the FDA will have a powerful role in shaping the new agency as it takes on many of the same functions now conducted by the Food and Drug Administration. The Obama administration announced earlier this week that it would move forward on its plan to post the first national food safety law on its Web site. The law would require food processors and retail sellers to provide the Food and Drug Administration and consumers with more detailed information about foods. The agency is also considering new rules that would crack down on companies that don't disclose the source of their products. The New York Fed board has a quorum of 12 members, including seven members of the board of directors of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York
