Iron loading induces dilation of carotid arteries in a dose-dependent manner. Iron overload is a common feature of patients with end-stage chronic kidney disease. Dense iron deposition in the carotid wall, known as atherosclerosis intima, has been described. In this study, we investigated whether iron overload induces dilation in the carotid artery wall. We included 26 chronic kidney disease patients with no previous history of end-stage renal disease. Twenty-four age-matched healthy volunteers with no history of cardiovascular disease were enrolled as controls. For each patient, we selected an inner and an outer carotid artery (ICA and OCA, respectively). A sample of the ICA and OCA was drawn for basal analysis. The same sample was divided in two aliquots. One was further treated with ferric nitrilotriacetate (FeNTA) to obtain an iron-overloaded sample. The other aliquot was left untreated as a control sample. A post-mortem bilateral internal carotid angiography was performed. Carotid diameters were measured and coronary atherosclerotic plaques were evaluated. FeNTA induced a dose-dependent dilation of the ICA, while no effect was evident on the OCA. No difference in carotid dilation was found

We're updating the long term firm contracts to incorporate the structure and consequences Californians want. ENA currently has financial transactions (like WSPP) that we intend to continue to perform, but which expose us to California regulatory risks. In general, there is no incentive for ENA to invest in products that may not be available in the future. Also, Enron is not exposing itself to future liability. The next way to move is to get California to say they can't live without Enron's products. So far they have resisted. That's why for ENA it has made sense to participate in the G-T-C to some extent, and that's why we are going to try to
