Main menu Post navigation Boeing's new order to Airbus may not look good Maybe it is getting too easy to predict what is going to happen in the commercial aircraft market. After all Airbus had a big order from Boeing and it is now entering the second year of deliveries of the A320neo. But now the two companies are entering into a battle. The market share of Airbus in 2018 is at 30.1% and it looks set to go further. Of the 380 planes delivered Boeing only had 13.1% of the market. According to Boeing's figures the largest market is the Asia Pacific (including Australia) with 15% of the market, followed by North America (including Canada) with 21% and then Latin America with 17%. So, for now at least, it looks like the battle will be fought in Latin America and Asia Pacific. That said, Boeing has just announced a new order for 250 A320neos from China Southern Airlines. The order is in addition to the 100 already under contract and all of this should increase Boeing's share in the Latin America region. Other than that we have to wait and see how Boeing and Airbus will compete. One thing is for sure, it won't be a war fought on price and Airbus has often said that is a given. With all the financial support they have had since 2010 the manufacturers can continue to keep the costs of production down. So what's the outcome going to be? Well, for now it looks like we are going to continue to see more A320neos delivered. It is what the market wants and Airbus
