How to Know If You're in a Relationship Written by dan santt Share Tweet Share Email A relationship is an ongoing and dynamic process. It is a continuation of being together in what began as just a casual connection. As a couple moves from new times, places and activities, they may also notice changes in their relationship. If you're wondering if your relationship is moving towards a deeper relationship or if it's just a stormy pattern and you know it's time to part ways, these signs may indicate that you're in a relationship. Other People The more you're spending time with someone, the more people will notice it. This is especially true of your friends and family. If it seems as though every time you and your partner are together you've got either family or friends around, you may be starting to develop a relationship. How Do You Behave How you relate with others (and how they relate with you) affects how others will interpret your relationship. If you change the way you relate to your partner's friends and family, or if your partner starts changing how he or she acts around the group, you may be developing a stronger relationship. A Happy Relationship You may feel happier when you're in a relationship. This is especially true if your partner is someone who makes you laugh. It could be that you're happier when you're with your partner because your partner has helped you grow through the years as a couple. It may also be a result of just being with someone you love.

Regardless of the reasons, it's clear that a happy and healthy relationship is a good thing. Your Love Language Different people have a love language. It's how they like to be loved. In a relationship, it's important to know how your partner wants to be loved. Love languages can be more clearly understood when a couple agrees to write a love letter to each other. After reading it, the person can see for themselves how their partner really feels about them. You can also see if a partner needs to change what he or she does to make the person feel loved. Your Faith If your relationship is Christian, your faith may begin to change as your love deepens. If you feel like God may actually want to be involved in your relationship, this may prompt you to pursue marriage more seriously. If, however, you think your relationship is more of a deep, emotional affair, you may
