Note Both Windows Live Photo Gallery and Microsoft Paint do the same thing, so you can use the other software if you want a better editing experience. ## The Quick Fix Dialog Box The Quick Fix dialog box is where you use Photoshop's toolbox of standard tools (see Figure 2-3), each of which performs a specific task on the picture you selected. When you select a tool in the toolbox, a quick selection box appears, indicating what part of the image the tool is supposed to affect. The Quick Fix dialog box gives you an easy way to select one of Photoshop's standard tools and fix whatever you want to fix. Figure 2-3. The Quick Fix dialog box's main feature is the toolbox, which contains a number of tools you can use to work with your image. The toolbox is revealed when you point the cursor at one of its many tool icons with the arrow keys or by pressing the Alt+W keyboard shortcut. You can also select the icon by clicking on it with your mouse. In the Quick Fix dialog box, click the menu button at the top of the dialog box and choose Select Item from the drop-down list to see the tools you've selected in your toolbox (see Figure 2-4). You can select up to 10 tools from the toolbox, or you can click on one of them to use it. To select a tool, point the cursor at its icon with the arrow keys or press the Alt+W keyboard shortcut, and drag it to the tool that best fits what you want to do. To return to the original image, click the icon with the delete key, or press Enter.

3. Click the Red arrow icon. You see the Create a New Brush dialog box shown in Figure 16-3. Figure 16-3. When you open this dialog box, you see this sample brush as the default. But don't worry—you can have as many brushes as you like and even delete one if you don't like the way it looks. To create a new brush, click the Brush Tool icon at the top of the dialog box and then choose Custom Shape from the Brush Presets drop-down menu at the top of the Brush dialog box. This sample brush has a big, round tip. But you can make it any size or shape you want.

Tuberculosis (TB) is a leading infectious cause of morbidity and mortality in developing countries including Thailand. Thorough infection control and hygiene in public health facilities are key preventive efforts to control the spread of TB and other infections in these settings. The objectives of this study are to assess the following factors related to TB infection control (TC) practices among TB patients, healthcare providers and hospital visitors during 2005: [unreadable] 1. The current level of TC (defined as the proportion of patients, staff and visitors tested for TB) in all hospitals; [unreadable] 2. The current level of TC (defined as the proportion of positive TB cases) in selected hospitals; [unreadable] 3. The proportion of staff, patients and visitors receiving information on the risk of TB transmission and risk of TB infection for themselves, each other and others; 4. Practices related to the identification and management of TB cases (including TB infection control measures, supervision of health care workers during and after the treatment of TB patients, identifying and managing TB contacts, reporting of TB cases and follow-up of TB contacts); [unreadable] 5. Knowledge related to TB transmission and TB infection control among TB patients and their family members; [unreadable] 6. Knowledge related to TB transmission and TB infection control among healthcare workers. [unreadable] The proposed study is a cross-sectional study, using a survey to assess levels of TC, and TB infection control measures including TB education and TB contact management. In addition, interviews will be conducted with TB patients, staff, patients' family members and healthcare workers in designated TB referral hospitals in Thailand. The interviewers will use a pre-tested and structured questionnaire for the interviews. In addition
