the affordable care act includes anti-kickback provisions in section 1320a-7b, which the u.s. department of health and human services (hhs) has implemented through regulation and enforcement. this section includes four provisions aimed at preventing fraud and abuse involving the provision of medical services. of these four provisions, only one -- which was eliminated by congress in 2013 -- prohibited the participation in a federal healthcare program by a person who participated in a kickback or other bribe-like arrangement. [11] the new regulation took effect in january of 2014. it made it illegal to solicit or accept anything of value in exchange for referrals to medicare or medicaid; recruiters also can't refer medicare or medicaid patients for paying services and can't share patient medical information with anyone else for paying the patient's medical bills. [11] florida attorney general pam bondi alleges that a financial company in the us invented a "mystery illness" to increase their life insurance sales. according to a press release, the illness was believed to be hodgkin's disease. the root requirement for the provision of services and utilities is typically with the customer. this can be overseen by the service or utility provider if the customer is unable to fulfil their obligations to the service or utility provider, but for the most part this will typically be limited to the non-payers. an example can be seen in the inability of the tax system to collect revenue. when resources are required to be provided, the customer will typically be mandated to pay for the services and utilities provided. alternatively, if the customer is able to fulfil their obligations to the service or utility provider, the service or utility provider will cover the expenses for these services and utilities. this is no different to the ability to service your vehicle. you have two options. a small local garage with a service department and mechanics on site or a large dealership that generally has a service department on site. both methods work. 5ec8ef588b
