Pseudo-Randolphian/Pseudo-Büchnerian carcinoma: molecular biology and implications in the management of malignant pleural effusions. Malignant pleural effusions represent the final common pathway of a variety of diseases, including pulmonary metastases and lymphoma, all of which may present as pseudorandolphian or pseudobüchnerian carcinoma. Malignant pleural effusions exhibit a highly characteristic cytological appearance, with the majority of cells containing abundant clear cytoplasm and nuclei that are strikingly similar to the cells lining the lining of the renal papilla, often referred to as "brown tumor of the renal papilla." In contrast, pseudo-Randolphian or pseudo-Büchnerian carcinoma may simulate any variety of lung, breast, renal, or gastrointestinal malignancies, and therefore may provide a challenging diagnostic dilemma. Cytogenetic and molecular studies may be helpful in the clarification of these cases. Herein we review the molecular biology of pseudo-Randolphian and pseudo-Büchnerian carcinoma and discuss the implications of these findings in the management of malignant pleural effusions.
