This study examines the use of advanced technology for the detection of neurofibrillary tangles in post mortem brain tissue from patients with dementia of the Alzheimer's type. The objectives are to examine the technique as a function of the stage of Alzheimer's disease, how it compares to other diagnostic methods, as well as to determine the impact of the method on reducing the possibility of misdiagnosis. Tau tangles are found in the neurons of patients with Alzheimer's disease. This study quantitates the presence of tau tangles using a method that provides information about the number of tangles per neuron. Assays are performed at the level of the nuclei and at the level of the cytoplasm. In addition, the immunohistochemical methods are used to determine if there are any changes in the distribution of tau tangles as the disease progresses. This study examines how Alzheimer's disease affects the cytoplasmic versus the nuclear tau tangles. In the event of a positive assay, the total number of tangles is determined, and the distribution of the tau tangles is evaluated in the nuclei and the cytoplasm. If there are not many tau tangles, then a few representative sections are submitted for double-labeling immunofluorescence analysis.Q: Which classes have a given multi-level inheritance structure? I was given a class hierarchy and told to find which classes have one or more of the given inheritance structure. To be clear, the guestion is: which classes have all of the given multilevel inheritance, even if they do not inherit any of the given superclasses (A, B,...) A: From Wikipedia: If a diamond is to be chosen from T1 as a superclass of T2, then it must be able to be chosen from T1. This makes the set of superclasses a subset of
