Customers are happy to see the final release of Photoshop Express, the one true all-in-one creative suite for mobile photography. They are looking forward to receiving the new features and improvements in the app. For me the saving didn't happen until I got my latest computer. Don't think I'm kidding, using the cloud tools with the new computer I flipped through an unedited RAW file in about 50 seconds. Hard to fathom on my old computer, and yes I did use the clone tool. I have plenty of time after lunch to work on it, and I think my brain is fried. After 35 years of identity regulated work, I really am into some more free time for the first time in a long time. Already have the workflow streamlined. This issue of Resolve magazine is quite refreshing. Hope I can get that timely converted.

Instead of diving into the mathematics behind the photo and video effects you see in the Photoshop Elements step by step walkthroughs, we recommend that you seek out a visual education. Not only does this provide a strong foundation for learning advanced effects, but it's good practice for creating and editing your own images. The software giant unveiled at the Photoshop World Vegas 2017 Conference (Opens in a new window) how it could take a seemingly endless supply of data and, with advances in machine learning, use that information to recreate a photo or video recreation of a scene. The scheme is called "What If," a feature that's available to Photoshop users with some graphic arts software branding. There's been rumors that the feature may find its way into other Adobe tools and, in that case, we can only agree. What if, indeed? What if your selfies look like anime characters? The latest version of the Adobe Photoshop program lets you do just that with the What If power behind the Lens Correction feature. Simply place your image over the crowdsourced portrait in the upper-left corner, and jump into the What If tool. You can then alter the image in about 30 seconds. This feature is designed to help experienced users achieve that "perfect, incandescent, can't-really-be-real-life image," while giving novices a strong starting point. With the introduction of HitFilm Studio 2.0 (now free), Adobe let users create HD movies with 5.1 channel audio and a surround sound experience using only Windows and Mac computers. Essentially, that means you can create 5.1 movies using the HitFilm app without having to dip into Adobe Premiere Pro or an alternative audio editing program.
