. Role of endonuclease in interferon-induced cell death. Antiviral proteins that cause the death of an infected cell may be induced by type I interferons. Induction of interferon-induced cell death in a number of virus-infected cell lines has been correlated with loss of viral proteinase-mediated autolysis. The interferon-induced cytolytic activity of a representative cell line, HeLa-1192-14, was inhibited by proteinase inhibitors and antibodies against p56(lck) and p60(lymphoid-specific protein). Addition of the catalytic fragment of p60(lymphoid-specific protein) enhanced the cell death mediated by interferons.Q: error C2672:
