Proposed guidelines to assess the management of chronic pain in adults in office-based practice. To establish the usefulness of a set of recommended criteria for the documentation of the chronic pain syndrome, as defined by the International Association for the Study of Pain, in office-based practice. We determined in a prospective study whether the results of the proposed criteria correlate to two widely used and validated patient-assessed pain instruments, the Brief Pain Inventory (BPI) and the Patient Health Questionnaire-9 (PHQ-9). The scores of the BPI and PHQ-9 were used in the evaluation of the surgical management of patients with chronic pain in office practice. Patients who reported pain for a minimum of 3 months and had a scheduled follow-up visit in our pain clinic were eligible for the study. There were 44 patients enrolled in the study. For 25 (56%) patients (group A), the BPI and PHQ-9 scores were also available from a minimum of 2 months before the evaluation. The scores were significantly different, with the BPI > PHQ-9 for all dimensions. There were a number of symptoms and comorbidities in patients without chronic pain, which were not detected by the BPI and PHQ-9. We think that one of the main advantages of these criteria is to record all aspects of the chronic pain syndrome, including psychosomatic symptoms, autonomic dysfunction, and comorbidities. Group A and the 14 consecutive patients who were assessed by the authors were evaluated according to the proposed criteria. The results of the proposed criteria correlated significantly with the BPI and PHQ-9 scores and are therefore useful in the evaluation of the surgical management of patients with chronic pain. Although the proposed criteria are useful in the evaluation of patients, they are not a replacement for the validated instruments. Many teeth in the human jaw have been explored from an historical point of view. The most frequent use of teeth can be considered. As a consequence of this widespread use, constant dental risk is present. In the first part of this study, the types and structures of these lesions are analysed. In the second part, the manufacturing processes are investigated. The manufacturing processes are considered with respect to the risk of tooth decay, erosion and dental caries. This data serves as the basis for the selection and application of dental devices. Based on these findings, modifications of the selection and application of dental implants and alloys are proposed., and so on. • Think I'm fooling around?
