This invention relates to a misting device and more particularly to a new and improved misting device which is especially adapted for use in connection with cooking food items in an oven. Pans and particularly cookware having self-basting coatings which are very efficient are known. Thus, for example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,874,418 discloses a vacuum-coated cooking pan having a porous surface. A basting fluid comprising an aqueous composition, and a waxy material are applied to the porous surface. After the aqueous and waxy basting fluid are dry, a liquid misting agent is directed onto the cooking pan to form a light layer of mist on the cooking surface. In this manner, excess basting fluid flows through the porous surface to be collected in a sump receptacle. While the above-mentioned misting device is very efficient, it does have a number of drawbacks. It is well known that the waxy material from which the basting fluid is made is very prone to flow at a very fast rate. As a result, there is a tendency for the basting fluid to overflow and drip or run off the pan even when the cookware is not cooking. Moreover, in the event that the pan is dipped in the waxy basting fluid, the waxy material tends to form a layer on the upper surface of the pan which reduces the amount of basting fluid which will flow through the porous surface.
