Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a power source switching circuit for switching a power source, and more particularly, to a power source switching circuit for switching a power source of a driving circuit for driving light-emitting elements. 2. Description of the Related Art Light-emitting element driving circuits of this type have conventionally been used for the light sources of liquid crystal displays, and the like. Specifically, a power source switching circuit is used to supply the power source required for driving the light-emitting element driving circuits, such as an external electric source, to the light-emitting element driving circuits. FIG. 1 shows a configuration of a general power source switching circuit. In this power source switching circuit, a power source input 101 is supplied to a ground potential through a level shift circuit 102. In the level shift circuit 102, the power source input 101 is externally supplied at a potential level of about 1.2 V, for example, to thereby have a ground potential. The level shift circuit 102 can be implemented by a differential amplifier. A power source switch 103 is turned on and off according to a transition of a control signal generated by a control circuit. A transistor in the power source switch 103 has a switching terminal that is connected to the ground potential to thereby turn on and off the power source switch 103. The transistor of the power source switch 103 can be implemented by a bipolar transistor, for example. The power source input 101 receives a power source of about 5 V to thereby be supplied to an analog signal processing circuit 104 for controlling the power source. The analog signal processing circuit 104 generates a control signal for controlling the power source switch 103 based on a potential difference between the power source input 101 and the ground potential. An output terminal of the analog signal processing circuit 104 is connected to the control terminal of the power source switch 103. The output signal from the analog signal processing
