Roblox is a free and social online virtual world and game platform developed by Roblox Corporation. It was developed in the year 2004 as a programming platform and game creation system which allows users to create games and play other games. Roblox is a game development platform that the developers promote as a "creator-powered" platform, allowing users to create games that are accessible and editable to anyone. The games are hosted on the Roblox platform, which is a free web service that frees users from buying and installing software. Every user is also given a Robux virtual currency with which to make purchases within the Roblox platform. To participate in Roblox, users first create a Roblox account through Roblox and then download Roblox Studio, Robux, and then can begin designing their games and creating the experiences they want. Roblox Studio is an integrated programming language for creating Roblox experiences in a web browser, with a visual editor. Roblox also integrates social features, including private messaging and free chat in-game for players, as well as social features not found in other social games such as virtual worlds like a social website. While Roblox was initially focused on educational games for children, it has grown to become a more general programming platform and game-creation system. When it was founded in 2004, Roblox had a small staff of a few developers and sales representatives who promoted the platform to schools and other youth organizations. They took advantage of the low price (at the time) of Robux, advertising the platform in magazine and newspaper articles, TV advertisements, radio and online advertising, and enlisting a variety of school organizations to pitch the platform to their members. With support from these early organizations, Roblox built a small network of schools with a Roblox server that allowed students to visit and play games created by other students. By the end of 2005, the company had around 10 million monthly active users, a sum that grew to 15 million by the end of 2006. The growth may have been slightly exaggerated in the press. However, Roblox has been adding tens of millions of users per month since then. In 2009, Roblox reported 20 million users, and the company reported reaching 40 million monthly active users in 2012. Roblox reached 100 million monthly active users in 2017. On the press side, media outlets greatly exaggerated the growth, claiming that Roblox users were doubling every few months. However

I have searched on google but found nothing. If its possible, where can I get it?

A: Roblox allows you to earn robux via in-game activities. These activities can be things like competing in tournaments (where you play other people) or watching ads or performing various tasks (e.g., mining various blocks, visiting different stores to purchase certain items). The most profitable way to earn robux is by completing activities, which has the advantage of being very passive. Robux are generated randomly while playing the game, and all you need to do is complete the activity. That way you can play as often as you want, but still earn robux. There are two good resources about how to earn robux in Roblox, with the two major players being which is active and honest, and which is active but less detailed.
