The concentrations of lead, zinc and cadmium in the edible parts of the lettuce (Lactuca sativa L.) were determined by ICP-MS. The concentrations of Pb and Zn in edible leaves of L. sativa were 0.1-0.8 mg kg⁻¹ and 0.9-4.7 mg kg⁻¹, respectively. There was a positive relationship between the lead and zinc concentrations in lettuce, suggesting that the zinc in lettuce absorbed the lead. The exposure of the plant to the heavy metals could be explained by the correlation analysis. The phytochelatins and metallothioneins as a plant defence proteins were also studied and found to be involved in heavy metal resistance. The cadmium concentrations in the edible part of the lettuce were about ten times less than the same concentrations in the root.As the field f988f36e3a
