However, the antithrombotic action of aspirin has not been well characterized. This study was designed to evaluate the preventive effects of aspirin on the development of hypercholesterolemia, endothelial dysfunction, and vasculopathy in high-fat diet (HFD)-induced obese rats. Endothelium-dependent relaxation in response to acetylcholine and endothelium-independent relaxation to sodium nitroprusside were significantly impaired in the aorta isolated from HFD-fed rats. Atorvastatin (10 mg/kg of body weight per day) treatment for 8 weeks significantly reduced the serum cholesterol level in HFD-fed rats.
