In case you haven't been following Adobe Photoshop lately, there have been changes made to the new Photoshop CC 2017 leading up to the release. Have a look at this setting for Nikon D750 and this setting for Pentax K-S1. For those who have opted to purchase Lightroom 5 (and those who are going to purchase it - it is a $300 upgrade fee plus the cost of the program), you'll not only see the basic refinement of Lightroom's look and feel - the absolute introduction of Creative Cloud for Lightroom use has been implemented in the latest version. You can now seamlessly move from using one of the basic tools to using one of the more distinctive tools - and back again. Lightroom 5 also fixes several bugs, shoots for further performance improvements and caters for Apple's US/UK keyboard layout - available with English, French, and German. Lightroom 5 is a big release for Lightroom fans. This update lets you see anything that appears in the original Lightroom application, improving on the experience with image browsing tools. Like the original Lightroom, the new release is a much faster and more modern application, also with Layers scaling, smarter handling of large files, shared projects, and more. Adobe has tried to make Lightroom 5 a "functional desktop application" by adding support for Retina displays and automatic update tools. Hold on. To be clear, what Adobe has done in Lightroom 5 is improve the existing core product. Better default settings, a faster workflow, a more powerful development engine, a streamlined user interface and a host of unsung improvements have been made. Note that Lightroom 5 does not actually use the new Quark engine. The default software of a new computer installation will include an older version of Quark anyways - though it should be updated to the latest version when that version becomes available.

While your social media accounts can do amazing things, they can also kick your butt when it comes to posting. You might be over-posting, sending out too many tweets to different groups, and creating your brand for the world to see. When it comes to the latter, you need to ensure you label what is advertising and what is not. For example, you wouldn't post a personal pic of your newborn to a business page with the caption "Newborn, 10lbs, no vaccinations." This is an easy mistake to make and it's a lost business opportunity. e3d0a04c9c
